PREFACE.

THE "STANDARD PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY," the result of many years' unremitting labour and research, will be found to combine the united labours of the most eminent lexicographers of modern times; among whom may be mentioned the names of Dr. Worcester, Webster, Goodrich, Johnson, Walker, Craig, Richardson, and Ogilvie. As philologers and orthoepists, they have largely contributed towards the improvement and perfectibility of our noble language. It only remained, therefore, for the Editor of the present Dictionary to raise a superstructure on the joint labours of his predecessors that should be found every way worthy of their distinguished pre-eminence, and thus produce a standard work of reference, which, by its numerous emendations and additions, should fully accord with the present advanced state of English literature.

In every dictionary, intended for popular use, there are three important requisites—ORTHOGRAPHY, ORTHOEPY, and DEFINITION. The first comprehends the correct spelling and syllabication of words; the second, their just pronunciation; and the third, their exact signification and different meanings. To these essentials the Editor has directed especial attention. Dr. Webster and his American copyists attempted to introduce some orthographical novelties into the English language; but as they are entirely opposed to the recognized usage of our country, they have been altogether rejected, and the general system of our best writers adopted. In pronunciation, Worcester, Webster, and Goodrich have adopted a plan of orthoepical notation which often obscures the orthography of a word; while Craig, on the contrary, follows the phonetic principle of simply re-spelling each word as it ought to be pronounced, and, at the same time, showing the true accentuation and proper syllabic divisions of each word. This plan, which from its simplicity and intelligibility claims a preference over every other, has been adopted in the present edition.

A clear and comprehensive definition of words is a most essential and important feature in all dictionaries; and to this the most especial attention has been devoted,—first, by giving the simple radical meaning of a word; then, its various collateral significations. "The definition of words," says Dr. Worcester, "is regarded as the most important feature of a dictionary; and a word should be so defined as to exhibit the meaning or different meanings in which it is used by good writers." To attain the objects thus briefly noticed has been the direct aim of the Editor. The utmost brevity and conciseness have been kept in view, so that the greatest quantity of matter should be compressed in the smallest compass; and he has only to hope that he has been enabled fully to carry out the three essential principles of a dictionary,—ORTHOGRAPHY, ORTHOEPY, and DEFINITION,—so as to render the "Standard Pronouncing Dictionary" worthy of its title.

In the ORTHOGRAPHY of the "STANDARD DICTIONARY" (as just observed) the innovations of the Transatlantic school have been entirely rejected, and the recognized lexicographical authorities of our own country followed as the best standards of English orthography, and as more congenial to English taste and English feeling. But it may be here remarked, that in consulting a dictionary for the right spelling of words, it should be borne in mind that there are many derivatives or grammatical inflections which are there necessarily omitted; as, desiring, desirest, desires, desireth, &c.; and therefore a few general observations on the orthography or formation of derivatives may be useful.

In the English language it is a general rule, that when words which end with the silent e receive an augment beginning with a vowel, the e is omitted; as, give, giving; sense, sensible; cure, curable; fame, famous, &c. Before fy and ty the e is changed into i; as, pure, purity, purify; active, activity. When the silent e is preceded by c or g soft, it is usually retained before able and ous; as, peace, peaceable; courage, courageous. The e is also retained before full, less, ly, ment, ness, some, ty; as, peaceful, nameless, wisely, excitement, whiteness, wholesome. It is also an established rule, that words which end with the vowel e, and lengthen the sound of a preceding vowel (as in file, write, endure), should drop the e on receiving a termination and becoming a derivative, if that termination begin with a vowel (as, er, ed, ing, ance). Thus file—filer, filing, not fileer; endure, enduring, endurance, not endureance.

In cases where the e affects the sound of a preceding consonant, it forms an exception; as in a word with a soft g, or where, in juxtaposition with another e, it forms one long vowel: thus, singe, singeing, see, seeing. Monosyllabic words ending in a single consonant, not preceded by a long vowel, and words of more than one syllable, ending in a single accented consonant, and of course not preceded by a long vowel, double the final consonant in all the derivatives which are formed by a termination beginning with a vowel; as, fit, fitted, fitteth, fitting; bar, barred, barreth; abet, abetted; compel, compelled.

Without this doubling of the final consonant, the vowel in the accented syllable of the primitive word (that is, the e in abet) would be pronounced wrong in the derivative (abetted, &c.), namely, with its long sound—fīted, bāred, abēted. Hence the reason why verbs, having the long sound of a vowel, do not double the last consonant; as feared, defiled, bloated.

Words ending in a single consonant, but not having the accent on the last syllable, do not double the final consonant in derivatives; as limit, limited; civil, civility; enter, entered; yet there still remain a small number keeping their ground in the printing-houses, such as leveller, traveller, rivalling, worshipper. A word ending in ll usually drops one l on becoming part of a compound word; as, all, always; fill, fulfil; full, fruitful; till, until. But there are some exceptions to this rule; as, recall, refill, uphill. Words ending in y, preceded by a consonant, change the y into i on receiving an augment; as, holy, holier; happy, happiness; pity, pitied. Exceptions: before ing, ish, and s, the y is retained; as, flying, babyish, for pity's sake: also in dryness, slyly, shyness. When the y is preceded by a vowel, it is retained; as boy, boyish; day, days; joy, joyful. Exceptions: gaiety, said, paid, laid.

Next to Orthography, the science of ORTHOEPY, as a guide to the rules of pronunciation, is the most important. It is derived from two Greek words (ὀρθὸς right, and ἔπω to speak), and comprehends that part of grammar which treats of the euphony of oral sounds. Orthography lays down rules for the right spelling of words, while Orthoepy teaches how to pronounce them. "The pronunciation of the English language, like that of all living languages," says Dr. Worcester, "is in a great measure arbitrary. It is exposed to the caprices of fashion and taste. It is liable to change from one age to another; and it varies more or less, not only in the different and distantly separated countries in which it is spoken, but also in the different divisions and districts of the same country. No two speakers or orthoepists, though inhabitants of the same place, would be likely to agree in the pronunciation of all its words. The standard of pronunciation is not the authority of any dictionary, or of any orthoepist; but it is the present usage of literary and well-bred society. The question may be asked, Where is this standard to be sought, or this usage to be ascertained? To this may be answered, that London is the great metropolis of English literature, and that it has an incomparably greater influence than any other city in giving law, in relation to style and pronunciation, to the many millions who write and speak the language." Hence it is that English orthoepists naturally refer to the usage of the best society in London as their safest standard; although, even here, in many words there is no certain uniformity. Discrepancies are found to exist, and it only remains for the lexicographer and orthoepist to endeavour to reconcile those discrepancies according to the best of his judgment.

After all, the science of orthoepy is the surest guide to correct pronunciation; and hence its importance in every grade of social life. Its principles are founded on letters, which consist of vowels and consonants. Letters are the elements into which the words of any language may be analysed; and they form the necessary alphabet of that language. Words are the due combination of letters and syllables, and form distinct and articulate sounds for conveying our ideas to one another; and a good orthoepical dictionary may be considered as the best and most important medium for attaining a correct knowledge of the principles and practice of good pronunciation. Some acquaintance, however, with the general properties of vowels and consonants may be necessary to the right understanding of orthoepical science. The distinction between them is great. A vowel sound may be continued at pleasure, or it may be terminated either by discontinuing the vocal effort—in which case it is not articulated by any consonant, as in pronouncing the vowel o; or by changing the conformation of the mouth, or relative position of the organs of speech, so that the vowel sound is lost by articulation, as in pronouncing the syllable on.

In the pronunciation of consonants there are many peculiarities. Dr. Crombie, in his "Etymology of the English Language," says, that in pronouncing consonants there are five distinguishable positions of the organs. The first is the application of the lips to each other, so as to close the mouth. Thus are formed the consonants p, b, and m. In the second position, the under lip is applied to the fore teeth of the upper jaw; and in this manner we pronounce the consonants f and v. The third position is, when the tongue is applied to the fore teeth; and thus we pronounce th. In the fourth position, we apply the fore part of the tongue to the fore part of the palate; and by this application we pronounce the letters t, d, s, z, r, l, n. The fifth position is, when the middle part of the tongue is applied to the palate; and thus we pronounce k, the hard sound of g (as in ga), sh, j, and ng. In the first position we have three letters, of which the most simple, and indeed the only articulator, being absolutely mute, is p. In the formation of this letter, nothing is required but the sudden closing of the mouth, and stopping the vowel sound. B, though justly considered as a mute, is not a perfect mute. The mouth being kept in the same position, and the breath being emitted through the nostrils, the letter m is produced. In the first position, therefore, we have a perfect mute p, having no audible sound; a labial and liquid consonant m, capable of a continued sound; and, between these two extremes, we have the letter b, somewhat audible, though different from any vocal sound. In the second position we have the letters f and v, neither of which are perfect mutes. The letter f is formed by having the aspiration not altogether interrupted, but emitted forcibly between the fore teeth and the under lip. This is the simple articulation in this position. If to this we join the guttural sound, we shall have the letter v, a letter standing in nearly the same relation to f, as b and m, in the first position, stand to p. Thus we have four distinctions of consonants in our alphabet, namely, of perfect and imperfect consonants, perfect and imperfect mutes. Thus p is a perfect mute, having no sound; b an imperfect mute, having proper sound, but limited; m a perfect consonant, having sound, and continued; f an imperfect consonant, having no sound audible.

In the "STANDARD DICTIONARY" it will be seen that the greatest care has been taken to simplify the elements of orthoepy, and almost entirely to do away with those numerous marks of orthoepic notation, which, in many of our pronouncing dictionaries, appear confusing to the eye, and are difficult to recollect. The object of the Editor, however, has been to spell each word phonetically, or precisely as it would be written if spelt according to sound. The syllabication and accentuation of dissyllables and polysyllables are minutely noted; but figures, prosodial quantities, and arbitrary marks, generally so puzzling to the student, are entirely laid aside; and although it may be difficult to convey the niceties of pronunciation in particular words, yet it will be found, on the whole, that it approaches as near to accuracy as any combination of letters can be expected to accomplish. In the endeavour to avoid all superfluous or arbitrary marks of notation, a difficulty presented itself in the different vocal sounds of the letter a. In the long close sound, peculiar to the English, as fa'tal, there could be no difficulty; its broad sound is readily expressed by aw, as in fall (fawl); and the close consonantal sound is clearly indicated by the syllabication and accent, as in an'imal: but the true expression of the open Italian sound could not be indicated without some peculiar mark of notation; and therefore the dotted and double-dotted ȧ and ä were adopted as the simplest orthoepic marks that could be introduced; as in speakable (speek'ȧbl), father (fä'ther), &c. But in some words there is a soft intermediate sound between u and oo, as in wood, or woman; which is expressed by the short double oo, thus marked, wo͝od, wo͝om'un; and this pronunciation is quite distinct from that of u in wonder (wun'der), or the oo in womb (woom).

In distinguishing the long sound of the vowel i, without the mark of long quantity (ī), as generally adopted by orthoepists, there was some little difficulty; for the words find, wind, &c., might naturally be pronounced short instead of long; when find would thus become finn'd; and the verb to wind, be sounded like wind. To remedy this, the orthoepic orthography, in perfect agreement with the sound, has been adopted. Thus, we have fine'd instead of finde or find, wine'd instead of winde or wīnd, mine'd instead of minde or mīnd, &c. Hence, a long list of mystic characters, with which many pronouncing dictionaries are interlarded is happily avoided.

In connection with orthoepy, the correct Accentuation of words is an important feature, to which the Editor has devoted especial attention. Accent is the laying of a peculiar stress of the voice on a certain letter or syllable of the word, sometimes on the vowel, and sometimes on the consonant, as in Ma'gi and maǧic; so that one particular syllable of a word is more fully distinguished than the rest. All the words of the English language, except the monosyllabic ones, have an accented syllable; and most of our polysyllabic words have not only a primary accent, but sometimes a secondary one; but it is only in a few compound words that this secondary accent is noted. It is the general tendency of the language to place the accent on the first syllable of dissyllables, and on the antepenult of polysyllables; but the exceptions to this rule are so numerous, that, in doubtful cases, the best authority is a good pronouncing dictionary.

As an appropriate and necessary appendage to a Pronouncing Dictionary, the Editor has annexed some useful articles for explaining the correct pronunciation of Greek, Latin, and Scripture proper names; and also a summary of orthoepical rules for the true pronunciation of those foreign names which are perpetually occurring in the course of conversation or reading.

The COMPOUNDS of the English language are very numerous, and materially contribute to its copiousness. The great mass of them are omitted in our ordinary dictionaries; but their great importance has induced the Editor to insert all that are presumed to be of general utility; and for this purpose they are usually printed in a compressed form, and followed on alphabetically, in italics, from their primitive word; as under Gage, Galley, Milk, Money, Over, Well, Wheel, White, &c. Any additional explanation, when required, can be readily obtained by reference to the primary words which individually form the compound. Thus the reader, when searching for a compound word, will generally find it under its primitive; except in peculiar cases, when the compound is of an important character, or admits of a meaning different from what might be nferred from the primitive roots.

In conclusion, it is only necessary to explain that all obsolete words are marked with a double dagger, thus ‡; and those of rare occurrence with a single dagger, thus †.

PRONUNCIATION

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

"THE pronunciation of the learned languages" (says Walker, in his 'Key to Classical Pronunciation') "is much more easily acquired than that of our own. Whatever might have been the variety of different dialects among the Greeks and the different provinces of the Romans, their languages, now being dead, are generally pronounced according to the respective analogies of the several languages of Europe, when those languages are cultivated without partaking of those anomalies to which the living languages are liable." But as regards the pronunciation of Greek and Latin proper names, which are of frequent occurrence in reading and conversation, the following compendious rules will be found generally useful:—

THE VOWELS.

EVERY vowel with the accent on it at the end of a syllable is pronounced as in English, with its first, long, open sound: thus, Ca'to, Philome'la, Ori'on, Pho'cion, Lu'cifer, &c., have the accented vowels sounded exactly as in the English words pa'per, me'ter, spi'der, no'ble, tu'tor, &c.

Every accented vowel not ending a syllable, but followed by a consonant, has the short sound, as in English: thus, Man'lius, Pen'theus, Pin'darus, Col'chis, Cur'tius, &c., have the short sound of the accented vowels, as in man'ner, plen'ty, prin'ter, col'lar, cur'few, &c.

Every final i, though unaccented, has the long, open sound: thus, the final i forming the genitive case, as in Magis'tri, or the plural number, as in De'cii, has the long, open sound, as in vi'al; and this sound we give to this vowel in this situation, because the Latin i final in genitives, plurals, and preterperfect tenses of verbs is always long; and consequently, where the accented i is followed by i final, both are pronounced with the long diphthongal i, like the noun eye, as Achi'vi.

Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, as that in the second of Alcibiades, the Hernici, &c., is pronounced like e, as if written Alcebiades, the Herneci, &c. So the last syllable but one of the Fabii, the Horatii, the Curiatii, &c., is pronounced as if written Fa-be-i, Ho-ra-she-i, Cu-re-a-she-i; and therefore, if the unaccented i and the diphthong æ conclude a word, they are both pronounced like e, as Harpyiæ, Har-py'e-e.

The diphthongs æ and œ, ending a syllable with the accent on it, are pronounced exactly like the long English e, as Cæsar, Œta, &c., as if written Cee'sar, Ee'ta, &c.; and like the short e, when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, as Dædalus, Œdipus, &c., pronounced as if written Deddalus, Eddipus, &c. The vowels ei are generally pronounced like long i. For the vowels eu in final syllables, see the word Idomeneus; and for the ou in the same syllables, see the word Antinous, and similar words, in the Terminational Vocabulary.

Y is exactly under the same predicament as i. It is long when ending an accented syllable, as Cy'rus; or when ending an unaccented syllable, if final, as Æ'gy, Æ'py, &c.: short when joined to a consonant in the same syllable, as Lyc'idas; and sometimes long and sometimes short, when ending an initial syllable not under the accent, as Lycur'gus, pronounced with the first syllable like lie, a falsehood; and Lysim'achus with the first syllable like the first of legion, or nearly as if divided into Lys-im'-a-chus, &c.

A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the same obscure sound as in the same situation in English words; but it is a sound bordering on the Italian a, or the a in father, as Dia'na, where the difference between the accented and unaccented a is palpable.

E final, either with or without the preceding consonant, always forms a distinct syllable, as Penelope, Hippocrene, Evoe, Amphitrite, &c. When any Greek or Latin word is Anglicized into this termination, by cutting off a syllable of the original, it becomes then an English word, and is pronounced according to our own analogy: thus, Acidalius, altered to Acidale, has the final e sunk, and is a word of three syllables only. Proserpine, from Proserpina, undergoes the same alteration. Thebes and Athens, derived from the Greek Θῆβαι and Ἀθῆναι, and the Latin Thebæ and Athenæ, are perfectly Anglicized; the former into a monosyllable, and the latter into a dissyllable: and the Greek Κρήτη and the Latin Creta have both sunk into the English monosyllable Crete; Hecate likewise, pronounced in three syllables when Latin, and in the same number in the Greek word Ἑκάτη, in English is universally contracted into two, by sinking the final e.

The Roman magistrate, named Ædilis, is Anglicized by pronouncing it in two syllables, Æ'dile. The capital of Sicily Syracusæ, of four syllables, is made three in the English, Syr'acuse; and the city of Tyrus, of two syllables, is reduced to a monosyllable in the English Tyre.

THE CONSONANTS.

C and G are hard before a, o, and u, as Cato, Comus, Cures, Galba, Gorgon, &c.; and soft before e, i, and y, as Cebes, Cinna, Cycnus, Geryon, Geta, Gillus, Gyges, Gymnosophistæ, &c.

C, S, and T, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded by the accent in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh, as Accius, Caduceus, Helvetii, Hesiod, Mœsia, Portia, Portius, Socias, Statius, Tatian, pronounced Aksheus, Cadusheus, Helveshei, Hezheod, Mezhea, Porshea, Porsheus, Sosheas, Stasheas, Tashean, &c. But when the accent is on the first of the diphthongal vowels, the preceding consonant does not go into sh, but preserves its sound pure, as Miltiades, Antiates, &c.

Proper names ending in tia, sia, cyon, and sion, preceded by the accent, change the t, s, &c., into sh and zh. Thus, Phocion, Sicyon, and Cercyon, are pronounced exactly in our own analogy, as if written Phoshean, Sichean, and Sershean. Artemisia and Aspasia sound as if written Artemizhea and Aspazhea; Galatia, Aratia, Alotia, and Batia, as if written Galashea, Arashea, Aloshea, and Bashea; and if Atia, the town in Campania, is not so pronounced, it is to distinguish it from Asia, the eastern region of the world. But the termination tion (of which there are not even twenty examples in proper names throughout the whole Greek and Latin languages) seems to preserve the t from going into sh, as the last remnant of a learned pronunciation; and to avoid, as much as possible, assimilating with so vulgar an English termination: thus, though Æsion, Iasion, Dionysion, change the s into z, as if written Æzion, Iazion, Dionyzion, the z does not become zh; but Philistion, Gration, Eurytion, Dotion, Androtion, Hippotion, Iphition, Ornytion, Metion, Polytion, Stration, Sotion, Æantion, Pallantion, Ætion, Hippocration, and Amphyction, preserve the t in its true sound. Hephæstion, however, from the frequency of appearing with Alexander, has deserted the small class of his Greek companions, and joined the English multitude by rhyming with question; and Tatian and Theodotion seem perfectly Anglicized. With very, very few exceptions, therefore, it may be concluded that Greek and Latin proper names are pronounced alike, and that both of them follow the analogy of English pronunciation.

Ch. These letters before a vowel are always pronounced like k, as Chabrias, Cholchis, &c.; but when they come before a mute consonant at the beginning of a word, as in Chthonia, they are mute, and the word is pronounced as if written Thonia. Words beginning with Sche, as Schedius, Scheria, &c., are pronounced as if written Skedius, Skeria, &c.; and c before n in the Latin prænomen Cneus or Cnæus is mute: so in Cnopus, Cnossus, &c., and before t in Cteatus, and g before n in Gnidus, pronounced Nopus, Nossus, Teatus, and Nidus.

At the beginning of Greek words, we frequently find the uncombinable consonants MN, TM, &c.; as, Mnemosyne, Mnesidamus, Mneus, Mnesteus, Tmolus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Nemosyne, Nesidamus, Neus, Nesteus, Molus, &c., in the same manner as we pronounce the words Bdellium, Pneumatic, Gnamon, Mnemonics, &c., without the initial consonant. The same may be observed of the C hard, like K, when it comes before T; as, Ctesiphon, Ctesippus, &c. Some of these words we see sometimes written with an e or i after the first consonant, as Menesteus, Timolus, &c., and then the initial consonant is pronounced.

Ph, followed by a consonant, is mute, as Phthia, Phthiotis, pronounced Thia, Thiotis, in the same manner as the naturalized Greek word Phthisic, pronounced Tisic.

Ps. P is mute, also, in this combination, as in Psyche, Psammetichus, &c., pronounced Syke, Sammetichus, &c.

Pt. P is mute in words beginning with these letters, when followed by a vowel, as Ptolemy, Pterilas, &c., pronounced Tolemy, Terilas, &c.; but when followed by l, the t is heard, as in Tleptolemus; for, though we have no words of our own with these initial consonants, we have many words that end with them, and they are certainly pronounced. The same may be observed of the Z in Zmilaces.

The letters S, X, and Z require but little observation, being generally pronounced as in pure English words. It may, however, be remarked, that s, at the end of words preceded by any of the vowels but e, has its pure, hissing sound; as, mas, dis, os, mus, &c.: but when e precedes, it goes into the sound of z; as, pes, Thersites, vates, &c. It may also be observed that, when it ends a word preceded by r or n, it has the sound of z. Thus the letter s in mens, Mars, mors, &c., has the same sound as in the English words hens, stars, wars, &c. X, when beginning a word or syllable, is pronounced like z; as, Xerxes, Xenophon, are pronounced Zerkzes, Zenophon, &c. Z is uniformly pronounced as in English words: thus, the Z in Zeno and Zeugma is pronounced as we hear it in zeal, zone, &c.

THE ENGLISH QUANTITIES.

It may be here observed that, in words of two syllables, with but one consonant in the middle, whatever be the quantity of the vowel in the first syllable in Greek or Latin, we always make it long in English. Thus, Crates, the philosopher, and crates, a hurdle; decus, honor, and dedo, to give; ovo, to triumph, and ovum, an egg; Numa, the legislator, and Numen, the divinity, have the first vowel always sounded equally long by an English speaker, although in Latin the first vowel in the first word of each of these pairs is short.

On the contrary, words of three syllables, with the accent on the first, and with but one consonant after the first syllable, have that syllable pronounced short, let the Greek or Latin quantity be what it will. Thus, regulus and remora, mimicus and minium, are heard with the first vowel short in English pronunciation, though the first two words of each pair have their first syllables long in Latin; and the u in fumigo and fugito is pronounced long in both words, though in Latin the last u is short. This rule is never broken but when the first syllable is followed by e or i, followed by another vowel: in this case, that vowel in the first syllable is long, except the vowel be i; thus, lamia, genius, Libya, deceo, cupio have the accent on the first syllable, and this syllable is pronounced long in every word but Libya, though in the original it is equally short in all.

In order to reduce these rules into a small compass, that they may be more easily comprehended and remembered, it may be observed, that as we always shorten every ante-penultimate vowel with the primary accent but u, unless followed by a semi-consonant diphthong, though this antepenultimate vowel is often long in Greek and Latin, as Æschylus, Æschines, &c.; and the antepenultimate i, even though it be followed by such a diphthong, as Eleusinia, Ocrisia, &c.; so we shorten the first syllable of Æsculapius, Ænobarbus, &c., because the first syllable of both these words has the secondary accent, but we pronounce the same vowels long in Æthiopia, Ægialeus, Haliartus, &c., because this accent is followed by a semi-consonant diphthong.

The general rule of quantity indicated by the syllabication is that, when a consonant ends the syllable, the vowel is always short, whether the accent be on it or not; and that, when a vowel ends a syllable with the accent on it, it is always long; that the vowel u, when it ends a syllable, is long, whether the accent be on it or not, and that the vowel i, when it ends a syllable without the accent, is pronounced like e; but if the syllable be final, it has its long, open sound, as if the accent were on it.

THE ACCENT.

Words of two syllables, either Greek or Latin, whatever be the quantity in the original, have, in English pronunciation, the accent on the first syllable; and if a single consonant come between two vowels, the consonant goes to the last syllable, and the vowel in the first is long, as Cato, Ceres, Comus, &c.

Polysyllables, adopted whole from the Greek or Latin into English, have generally the accent of the Latin; that is, if the penultimate be long, the accent is on it, as Severus, Democedes, &c.; if short, the accent is on the antepenultimate, as Demosthenes, Aristophanes, Posthumus, &c.

When Greek or Latin Proper Names are Anglicized, either by an alteration of the letters or by cutting off the latter syllables, the accent of the original, as in appellatives under the same predicament, is transferred nearer to the beginning of the word. Thus, Proserpina has the accent on the second syllable; but when altered to Proserpine, it transfers the accent to the first. The same may be observed of Homerus, Virgilius, Horatius, &c., when Anglicized to Homer, Virgil, Horace, &c. But Acrion, Arion, Amphion, Echion, Orion, Ixion, Pandion, Asion, Alphion, Ærion, Ophion, Methion, Axion, Eion, Thlexion, and Sandion preserve their penultimate accent invariably; while Ethalion, a word of the same form and origin, is pronounced with the accent on the antepenultimate, like Deucalion and Pygmalion.

The same difficulty of deciding between common usage and classical propriety appears in words ending in ia, as Alexandria, Antiochia. Seleucia, Samaria, Iphigenia, and several others, which were pronounced by our ancestors, as appears from their poetry, according to our own analogy, with the accent on the antepenultimate syllable; and there is no doubt but every word of this form would have fallen into the same accentuation, if classical criticism had not stepped in and prevented it. Some, however, seem always to have preserved the accent of their original language, as Thalia and Sophia; but Iphigenia, Antiochia, Seleucia, and Samaria have generally yielded to the English antepenultimate accent, and Erythia, Deidamia, Laodamia, Hippodamia, Apamia, Ilithyia, and Orithyia, from their seldom appearing in mere English composition, have not often been drawn aside into plain English pronunciation. The same may be observed of words ending in nicus or nice: if they are compounded of the Greek νικη, the penultimate syllable is always long, and must have the accent, as Stratonicus, Berenice, &c.; if this termination be what is called a gentile, signifying a man by his country, the penultimate is short, and the accent is on the antepenultimate, as Macedonicus, Sardonicus, Britannicus, &c.

Thus we see many of these proper names are of dubious accentuation; and the authorities which may be produced on both sides sufficiently show us the inutility of criticising beyond a certain point. It is in these as in many English words: there are some which, if mispronounced, immediately show a want of education; and there are others which, though not pronounced in the most erudite manner, stamp no imputation of ignorance or illiteracy. To have a general knowledge, therefore, of the pronunciation of these words, seems absolutely necessary for those who would appear respectable in the more respectable part of society. Perhaps no people on earth are so correct in their accentuation of proper names as the learned among the English. The Port Royal Grammar informs us that, "notwithstanding all the rules that can be given, we are often under the necessity of submitting to custom, and of accommodating our pronunciation to what is received among the learned, according to the country we are in."

But however uncertain and desultory the accentuation of many words may be, it is a great satisfaction to a speaker to know that they are so. There is a wide difference between pronouncing words of this kind ignorantly and knowingly. A person who knows that scholars themselves differ in the pronunciation of these words can always pronounce with security; but one who is unacquainted with the state of the accent is not sure that he is right when he really is so.

HEBREW AND SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

It is generally admitted that the true pronunciation of Hebrew is now lost: a few general rules, however, may be given as a guide to the pronunciation of the Hebrew proper names occurring in the Old and New Testaments. One of the chief differences between the pronunciation of the Hebrew names and that of the Greek and Latin applies to the sound of the letter g, which in Greek and Latin is soft before e, i, and y—as Gellius, Gippius, Gyas, &c.; but in Hebrew names it is hard—as Gerizim, Gideon; except Bethphage, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, has conformed itself to the Greek pronunciation

In Hebrew names, the double letter ch, which in the English language admits of three different pronunciations (k, tch, and sh), is sounded hard like k—as Chebar, Enoch; but the words Rachel and Cherubim are Anglicised in their pronunciation, as in the English word Charity; but the city of Cherub is pronounced Ke'rub.

The consonants c, s, and t, before ia and iu, take the sound of sh, in a number of Scripture names, when preceded by an accent—as Asia, Cappadocia, Galatia, &c.

As to the vowels and diphthongs, the final i, when it forms a distinct syllable, is pronounced with a long sound—as A'i, Aris'a-ī; but the two vowels ai are pronounced sometimes as a diphthong, as in Mor'de-cai, and sometimes as two distinct vowels, as in Hag'ga-i. The two vowels ia, when preceded by a vowel, are sometimes pronounced as one syllable, the i sounding like y—as Isaiah (Isa'yah), Benaiah (Bena'yah); but when sounded as two syllables, the accent is on the i—as Ad-a-i'ah. When ei is followed by a vowel, the i is usually sounded like the consonant y—as Iphideiah (If-e-de'yah). Names of Gentile origin, whether plural or singular, ending in ene, ine, and ite, are pronounced like the English formatives—as Nazarene', Philis'tine, Am'monite, though Magdale'ne forms an exception.

The following is an alphabetical list of SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES of more than two syllables, the accentuation and syllabication of each being duly noted. Words of only two syllables are omitted, because, as they are always accented on the first, no mistake can arise in their pronunciation

EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

In conformity with the general objects of a Pronouncing Dictionary, we shall here introduce some useful orthoëpical rules for the correct pronunciation of those European names which are perpetually occurring in the course of reading or conversation.

The four leading languages of Europe, which are most generally studied by the English, are French, German, Italian and Spanish; and therefore to them we shall confine our summary—merely premising that the Dutch, Swedish, and Danish very much assimilate to the German, and Portuguese to the Spanish. Hence will a knowledge of the following rules be the means of preventing any ludicrous errors in pronouncing the names of foreign places or persons.

FRENCH NAMES.

The vowel a, in French, is generally considered as having two distinct sounds; the first long (pas), as in the English word far; the second short (bal), as in hat. The circumflexed â, however, has a sound broader than a in pas, being intermediate between that in far and that in fall.

E has three sounds: the first short and acute, like e in met, as été; the second open, and more prolonged, like a in hate, as tête; and the third obscure, as in battery (retour).

I is distinguished by two sounds: first nearly as in the English word fig (il); the second like ie in field, as exile.

O has three sounds: first nearly as in robe (trône); second, as in rob (parole); third, as in lord (corps).

U has not a precise equivalent in English, but it is nearly like the vocal sound of ue in flue; but with the nasal n, as in un, it takes the sound of ung.

Y is similar to the French i.

Ai is like è or ā.

Au is like ō.

Ei is like è.

Eu is similar to the English u in tub, but the sound is more prolonged, nearly resembling u in fur.

Ie is like ee in English, or ĭ.

Oi usually sounds like wă, e.g. moi is pronounced mwă or mwŏh.

Ou sounds like oo in English.

B, c, d, f, k, p, t, v, and z, are the same as in English.

G, before a, o, and u, is hard, as in the English word gap; before e, i, and y, it is soft, having the sound of zh, or of s in pleasure. Gu sounds like g hard; thus, gué, guide, are pronounced gă, gheed.

H is never pronounced in French so forcibly as in English. Some orthoëpists say that h has no sound in French.

J sounds like soft g in French, or zh in English.

L has usually the the same sound as in English; but when it ends a word, being preceded by i, or when ll follows i, in any situation, it usually has what is called its liquid sound. This may be said to answer nearly to the sound of lli in million, the sound of l in such cases being blended with that of y (consonant); e.g. papillon is pronounced pă'-peel'-yŏn'; Chantilly, shăn'-teel'-ye', &c.

M and N, when followed by a vowel, or when double, have the same sound as in English; but when at the end of a word (not immediately followed by another word beginning with a vowel), or when followed by another consonant in the middle of a word, they have what is termed the nasal sound, which resembles that of ng, as in long, pang, &c., but is somewhat softer; thus, m and n are nasal in such words as comparer, contente, but have their natural sound in such as commune, connu.

Q or qu, in French, generally sounds like k; e.g. quel is pronounced kel; qui, kee, &c.

R is like the English, but is trilled more strongly, especially when it precedes another consonant, or stands at the end of a word, as in vertu, punir: in similar cases the English r is but very slightly sounded.

S, when single and between two vowels, sounds like z: in other cases it is the same as in English.

X generally has the same sound as in English, but is sometimes sounded like s; e.g. in six, pronounced seece, and Bruxelles (Brussels), pronounced Bru'-sell'; and occasionally like z, as in dixième, de'-ze'-ame'.

Ch is like sh in English: th is like t.

Gn (the same as in the Italian) has a sound which blends that of n and y (consonant), or, in other words, is equivalent to the sound of ni in minion. Thus Avignon is pronounced ă'-veen'-yŏn.

The vowel e at the end of a word, when not marked with an accent, is invariably mute, e.g. in parle, contente, &c.

The French consonants, when occurring at the end of a word, are generally not pronounced, unless they are immediately followed by a word beginning with a vowel; as in content, Bordeaux, and dents. If, however, they are followed by a mute e, or any other vowel, they must always be articulated, e.g. contente, dente, &c.

It may be observed that the French language has no accent in the sense in which we employ this term. The marks called accents, that are placed over the different vowels, serve only to indicate some particular sounds of these letters. Thus the accent over the e in parlé serves to show that this vowel has its first French sound, and at the same time distinguishes it from parle, another form of the same verb, in which the e is mute. The circumflex imparts to the vowels over which it is placed, a longer and deeper sound than ordinary; e.g. in hâte, tempête, gîte, and apôtre.

GERMAN NAMES.

A, in German, usually sounds as in the English word far, though sometimes approximating the a in fat.

E, when long, sounds like a in fate; when short, like e in met: frequently, however, it has an obscure sound, like e in battery.

I, long, sounds like i in marine (or ee in English); i, short, like i in pit.

O, long, is like that in no; o, short, like that in on.

U, long, is like oo in cuckoo; u, short, is like oo in good.

Y sounds like the German i.

Ae, or ä, is similar to the German e, or to the English a in fate.

Oe, or ö, nearly resembles the eu in French, but has no parallel sound in English; the sound in our language nearest to it is that of e in her, or u in fur; the German poets often rhyme it with e (ă or ĕ).

Ue, or ü, is like the French u.

Au is equivalent to the English ou in our.

Äu and eu resemble in sound the English oi, as in oil.

Ei and ey have the sound of i in mine.

Ai is similar to the preceding, but somewhat broader.

Ui sounds like oo͝e.

Ie is equivalent to ee in English.

The consonants f, k, l, m, n, p, q, t, and x, are pronounced as in English.

B and d, at the beginning of a word, have the same sound as in English; at the end of a word, b is pronounced like p, and d like t.

C, before a, o, and u, sounds like k; before e, i, and y, like ts.

Ch has a sound unknown in our language, and which, consequently, can be learned from an oral instructor only. It somewhat resembles that of our h, with a strong aspiration: after a, o, and u, it is guttural; for example, in the word ach. When it follows e, i, ä, ö, ü, äu, or eu, it seems to be sounded more in the palate, as in ich.

G, at the beginning of a word, sounds as in the English word get. In other situations it should be pronounced like the German ch. In some German dialects, however, it is sounded, in all cases, nearly like g hard in English.

H is pronounced only when it begins a word.

G and h, occurring after a vowel, lengthen its sound; e. g. in Tāg, Zāhl, Flōh, &c.

When g and h occur in the middle of a compound word, they have the same sound as when they are initial.

J has the sound of the English y (consonant).

Q is only used before u, and sounds as in the English word quit.

R is pronounced like rr in the English word terror, but somewhat more strongly.

S, at the beginning of a word, or between two vowels, is like z; in other cases it is sharp, as in this. Ss is always sharp.

Sch sounds like the English sh; sz, like ss.

Th is pronounced like t.

V sounds like f in English, except when between two vowels; it is then usually pronounced like our v.

W resembles our v; but in pronouncing it the upper teeth should not be allowed to touch the lower lip, as is done in uttering the English v.

Z and tz sound like ts.

ITALIAN NAMES.

A, in Italian, is like the English a in far, though its sound varies somewhat in different situations.

E has two sounds: first close, as a in fate; second open, like e in met.

I is like e in me, or i in flg.

O has two sounds: first close, as in note; second open, similar to o in not, but rather broader.

U is like oo in English.

Ai and au, in Italian, are proper diphthongs. Accordingly, Cairo is to be pronounced kī'-ro, and Ausa, ou'-să, &c.

The consonants b, d, f, l, m, n, p, q, s, t, and v, are similar to the English.

K, w, x, and y, are not used by the Italians, except in spelling foreign names.

C and cc, before a, o, and u, are sounded like k; before e, i, and y, like ch or tsh.

As c, when immediately before a, o, or u, is never pronounced like ch, in order to express this sound in such cases, the vowel i is inserted; thus, cia, cio, ciu, are pronounced chă, cho, choo.

Ch is employed to express the sound of k fore e and i.

G, before a, o, and u, is hard, as in the English word get; before e, i, and y, it sounds like the English j; gia, gio, giu, are pronounced ja, jo, joo.

Gh is used to express the sound of hard g before e and i.

Gli has the sound of the liquid l (l), or of lli in million; thus Boglio is pronounced bole'-yo.

Gn has the same sound as in French; or, in other words, is like the Spanish n; e. g. Bologna is pronounced bo-lone'-yă.

H is never sounded in Italian.

J, at the beginning of a syllable, is like the English y (consonant); at the end of a word, it is equivalent to ii (Italian).

R resembles the French, but is trilled somewhat more strongly.

Sc, before e and i, is like the English sh; e. g. Scio is pronounced Shee'-o.

Z has commonly the sound of dz in English; zz is pronounced like ts.

SPANISH NAMES.

The Spanish a sounds as in the English word far; e like a in ale; i like e in mete; o as in English; u like oo; and y like Spanish i.

Ai and ay are like long i in English. Au sounds like ou in our. Ei and ey are pronounced ā'-e.

The consonants f, l (single), m, n, p, s, t, and v, are pronounced nearly as in English.

B at the beginning of a word sounds as in English; but when it occurs between two vowels, its sound resembles that of v, with this difference—v is pronounced with the upper teeth placed against the under lip, while the sound of the Spanish b is formed by bringing the lips loosely or feebly into contact. This sound seems to be between that of v and the English w.

C, before a, o, and u, is pronounced as in English; before e and i, it has the sound of th in the word thin. In the Catalan dialect it is the same as in English.

Ch has the same sound as in English, except in the dialect of Catalonia, where it is pronounced like k.

D, at the beginning of a word, is sounded very nearly as in English, but is pronounced with the tip of the tongue against the upper teeth, while in pronouncing the English d the tongue is made to touch the roof of the mouth.

G, before e and i, and J before every vowel, are pronounced like a strong guttural h, similar to the German ch in ach

G, before a, o, and u, is hard, as in English.

Gua and guo sound somewhat like gwă, gwo, but the g is so soft that it is scarcely perceived; so that in these cases the sound of gu seems to approximate very nearly to that of the English w. Gu, before e and i, is usually sounded like g hard; thus, Guiana is pronounced ghe-ăn'-ă.

H, in Spanish, is never pronounced, except in words beginning with hue, and then very slightly.

Ll (now sometimes written l), has a sound which combines that of l and y (consonant), and is similar to the liquid l in French; e.g. villa or vila is pronounced veel'-yă: Llerena, lyă-rā'-nă.

N, in a similar manner, unites the sounds of n and y, and is like gn in French; thus peña, is pronounced pane'-yă.

Q, in Spanish, is always followed by u. Qu, before a and o, is sounded as in English; or, in other words, is equivalent to kw; before e and i it is pronounced like k, unless the u be marked with a diæresis, in which case it is like kw.

R is similar to the French, but is trilled more strongly.

T is to be pronounced by putting the tip of the tongue against the upper teeth.

X is usually sounded like the Spanish j, which letter, according to the present mode of spelling, has been generally substituted for it: thus, instead of the old spelling, Ximenes, Xucar, &c., we now see Jimenes, Jucar, &c.

ON THE

ORIGIN, CONSTRUCTION, AND DERIVATION

OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE is chiefly derivative. It was originally formed from the language spoken by the various tribes from the north of Germany, who settled in this country in the fifth and sixth centuries. The principal of these tribes were the Jutes, the Saxons, and the Angles. On invading this country they drove the greater number of the aboriginal inhabitants into the western and mountainous parts of Wales, where the descendants of these inhabitants are now located, and where the language of the ancient Britons, now called "The Welsh," is still spoken. Soon after these settlers arrived, the southern part of Britain was called Angleland (land of the Angles), or England; and the language which they spoke, formed from the amalgamation of their various dialects, was called the Anglo-Saxon language.

At the present time we find four great families of languages spoken in Europe, viz., the Celtic, the Latin, the Sclavonic, and the Gothic. The Celtic languages are spoken by the Welsh, the Highlanders (or Gaels), the Irish, and the inhabitants of the Isle of Man; their respective dialects being called Welsh, Gaelic, Erse, and Manx. The Latin language, with various modifications, is spoken by the Italians, the Spanish, the French, and the Portuguese. The Sclavonic is spoken by the inhabitants of Russia, Poland, Croatia, and some parts of the Austrian Empire. The other inhabitants of Europe speak the Gothic languages, which are also called Teutonic. The English is one of the Gothic family of languages, and as such resembles the German, the Dutch, the Flemish, the Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian.

The majority of words in the English language are from the Anglo-Saxon, including the more common, homely, and familiar words; as, come, go, can, will, good, see, hear, above, home, bad. The others are mostly from the Latin, or the language of the ancient Romans. Some are from the French, Celtic, Greek, German, and Danish languages. Latin words were introduced by the clergy of the Romish church after Christianity was established, and by learned men after the revival of the study of the ancient languages in the 15th and 16th centuries. French words were added by the Normans after the Conquest. About the beginning of the 17th century, in the reign of James I., our language had become almost the same as it is now, and was then generally called the English language.

When the Bible had been translated into English, and, by being printed, had been spread among the people; when the Book of Common Prayer had been compiled, and, with the Bible, was read to the people in the churches; and when great writers, such as Spenser, Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Bacon, and Milton, had published works which were universally read and admired—the language became fixed; and since those times it has not undergone any material change; although numerous Greek and Latin words have been introduced, chiefly during the present century, to supply new terms required by the rapid extension of the arts and sciences; and all those in general use have been inserted and explained in the body of this Dictionary.

Arts, Laws, Logic, Music, and other short words are not abbreviated.

à denotes that the vowel has an open Italian sound, as à-vale (avail) ; à-wate (await) ; so'-she-à-bl, (sociable), &c.

ä indicates a broad, open sound, as in fä'-ther (father), &c.

o͞o signifies a soft intermediate sound between u and oo, as wo͞om'-un (woman).

† signifies that the word is rarely used.

‡ that the word is obsolete, or nearly so.

ABBREVIATIONS OF THE "PARTS OF SPEECH,"

AND THEIR GRAMMATICAL SIGNIFICATIONS.

The words that constitute our language are classified under eight different heads, called "Parts of Speech;" and, independently of the articles a, an, and the, consist of the NOUN SUBSTANTIVE, the ADJECTIVE, the PRONOUN, the VERB, the ADVERB, the PREPOSITION, the CONJUNCTION, and INTERJECTION; and are found appended to each word in the Dictionary, thus abbreviated:—

s. .....substantive.	adv.....adverb.
a. .....adjective.	prep.....preposition.
pron. .....pronoun.	conj......conjunction.
v. ....verb.	int. .....interjection.

The four first parts of speech being declinable, or variable in grammatical formation, have different collateral words emanating from them, which are thus abbreviated:

s. pl. ....substantive plural.	pp. ....past participle.
v. a. .....verb active.	ppr. .....present participle.
v. n. .....verb neuter.	pret. .....preterite.
v. imp. .....verb impersonal.

Of these Parts of Speech, each of the 60,000 words, of which our language is composed, belongs to one or the other. Thus the NOUN SUBSTANTIVE (derived from the Latin nomen substantivum) is "the name" of any thing that possesses "substantiality" or abstract being.—The NOUN ADJECTIVE (from the Latin adjectum) is a word "added to" the substantive, to signify the addition of some quality, circumstance, or manner of being.—The PRONOUN (from the Latin pro nomine) is used "in place of the Noun," to avoid tautological repetition.—The VERB (from the Latin verbum) is "the word" of a sentence, which asserts, commands, or inquires, and completes its grammatical construction.—The ADVERB (from the Latin ad verbum) is a word appended "to a verb," to express some circumstance relating to it; that is, to qualify it, or define the manner how.—The PREPOSITION (from the Latin præpositum) is a word "placed before" a noun or pronoun to show its relation to something previously mentioned.—The CONJUNCTION (from the Latin conjunctio) is used for the "joining together" of words or sentences.—The INTERJECTION (from the Latin interjectum) is an abrupt exclamation "thrown between" the words of a sentence. On referring to the Dictionary, the student will find words innumerable which are both substantives and adjectives, or verbs active and neuter, according to the respective senses in which they are used; but these are all clearly distinguished, and the definitions given accordingly.

THE STANDARD

PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY

ENGLISH LANGUAGE,

REVISED, IMPROVED, AND ENLARGED.

A, a vowel, is the first letter of the alphabet of all the known languages, except the Ethiopic, in which it is the thirteenth, and the Runic, in which it is the tenth. The reason generally assigned for its priority, is, that it represents the first vocal sound naturally formed by the human organs; being the sound uttered by merely opening the mouth, and without any effort to alter the natural position of the lips.

A has, in English, four distinct sounds: the long or slender, as in place, fate, cake; the short, as in cat, china, fancy; the open, or Italian, as in father, cast, glass; and the broad, as in wall, appal, which is shortened in squad, what. The long or slender is the true English sound of this letter; but, whenever it is an unaccented word or syllable, it has almost invariably the short sound.

A, a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon an or ane, is called the indefinite article, implying one, any, some one, and is used before nouns of the singular number, as, a man, a tree. Before a word beginning with a vowel or a silent h, it is, for the sake of euphony, changed into an, as, an owl, an heir; and also before a word beginning with h sounded, if the accent be not on the first syllable, as, an harangue; but it is not so altered either before u long, that letter having the power of the consonant y in you, or before the words one, once, &c., in which the o is pronounced as if preceded by the consonant w.

A has many significations in our old writers and in our provincial dialects, of which the following are some—ah, he, they, all, on, have, one, always, yes, even, &c. It has also a peculiar signification, denoting proportion, or each, as a hundred a year, a pound a man.

A, taken materially, or for itself, is a noun, as, a great A, a little a.

A, as a prefix to many English words, is equivalent to the prepositions in or on, as in asleep, alive, afoot, aground. It is also sometimes placed before a participle, as, gone a-hunting, come a-begging, the house is a-preparing. In words of Saxon origin, the prefix A is generally a mere syllabic augment, as in abare, adry, &c., for bare, dry, &c. As a prefix to words from the Greek, it is usually privative, as in achromatic, without colour, agalaxy, want of milk; and in this use, as when an article, it takes n between it and a following vowel, as in anarchy, want of government.

A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, anno, ante, &c., as, A.M., artium magister, master of arts; A.D., anno Domini, in the year of Our Lord; A.M., ante meridiem, before noon. Among the Romans, A.U.C. stood for anno urbis conditæ, from the year of the building of the city, or Rome.

A was also used by the ancients as a numeral to denote 500, and with a dash over it, $\bar{A}$, for 5,000.

A, in commerce, stands for accepted; and @ for at. Merchants and public officers also frequently number their books and documents by the letters A, B, C, instead of figures.

A, in heraldry, as a sign, stands for the dexter chief, or chief point in an escutcheon.

A, in logic, denotes a universal affirmative proposition. A asserts, and E denies.

ABACUS

A, in music, is the nominal of the sixth note in the natural diatonic scale, and corresponds to the la of Guido. It is also the name of one of the two natural moods; and it is the open note of the second string of the violin, by which the other strings are tuned and regulated.

C.

C is the third letter and second consonant of the English alphabet. Before a, o, u, l, and r, it has a hard, or close sound, like k; and before e, i, and y, it has a soft, or sibilant sound, precisely like s. When combined with the letter h, it has three different sounds; the first is equivalent to tsh, as in chair, church; the second is equivalent to k, as in character, chemistry; and the third, occurring only in a very few words, derived from the French, is equivalent to sh, as in chaise, chagrin, chemise.

C, as an abbreviation, stands for Christ, as A. C. for Anno Christi or ante Christum; also for companion, as C. B., Companion of the Bath. On medals, C stands for many names of persons, as Cæsar, Caius, Cassius, Carolus, &c.; and also of offices, as Censor, Consul.

C, as a numeral, stands for 100, CC, for 200, &c.

C, in music, when placed after the clef, is the mark of common time; and when a bar is perpendicularly drawn through it, alla-breve time is indicated. C is also the first note of the diatonic scale, answering to the do of the Italians, and the ut of the French.
